

Party On

In the article “Party On”, the author(whose name was not disclosed) discusses the expenses of the US General Services Administration Head Martha Johnson. The author starts off with a hook that makes the reader want to read more. Most of us have probably heard the saying “What happens in Vegas stays in Vegas”, well the author starts off the article with something opposite, “it didn’t stay in Vegas”. The author explains the outcome and later gets into the question why? There is use of some factual data like the amount of money her agency burned through. Later on we see uses of Pathos in the sentence “Neither could Johnson, who should’ve known better.”, and throughout the entire article, and this sentence gives the reader the idea that they shouldn’t feel bad or empathize for Martha. The author continues and adds in some personal remarks here and there when talking about Obama, who Martha failed to impress and of course, Martha her self.

The author express some humor and sarcasm here and there in his/her article. The author does not feel empathetic for Martha, who just had resigned, because as the author state she “could’ve known better”. As the article continues to stroll right along, the author involves president Obama into the mix and thats where we see the author’s true colors shine. In the article, after introducing president Obama into the mix, the author mentions that he’s “no slouch at spending tax dollars himself”. With this small statement, the reader can quickly determine that the author is NOT a Democrat as quickly as they can say DONKEY! At the end of the article, the author signs off with a “smart” sentence, “Alas, it shows no signs of stopping.” indicating to the reader that this is not that last time we will see this happen.

 · ★ Top Commenter

For the democrats its always party time with tax payers money.

Reply ·  2 · Like · Follow Post · 10 hours ago